

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Collin Barnes (cbarnes@hillsdale.edu) is Associate Professor of Psychology at Hillsdale College where he teaches classes on personality and social psychology, the history of psychology, Michael Polanyi, and the philosophy of social science.

Spencer Case (spencer.case@colorado.edu) received his PhD in 2018 in philosophy from CU Boulder. With interests in moral realism and other philosophical and political issues, he will be a postdoctoral researcher at Wuhan University in Wuhan, China beginning in the fall of 2019.

Colin Cordner (colin_cordner@yahoo.ca) is an instructor and visiting scholar in the Department of Greek and Roman Studies at Carleton University, Ottawa, Canada. He is presently working on updating Maben W. Poirier's annotated Michael Polanyi bibliography and studying the place of recollection in Greek and Buddhist meditative practices.

Janos Liska (janos.liska@gmail.com) used to teach at the Budapest University of Technology and Economics and Rajk László College for Advanced Studies. He now teaches yoga, seeking to understand how schools and academia could become so boring, whether technology could really change politics, and why breathing slower still seems to matter more.

Martin X. Moleski (moleski@canisius.edu) taught Religious Studies and Theology at Canisius College and now serves as an assistant to the editors of Biblica and Orientalia at the Pontifical Biblical Institute in Rome.

Nigel Newton (newtonN2@cardiff.ac.uk) is an educational researcher based at Cardiff University, in the UK, currently working on a Welsh Government funded project exploring the potential impact of curriculum reform on children from more disadvantaged backgrounds.

Timothy L. Simpson (tl.simpson@moreheadstate.edu) is professor and Chair of the Department of Foundational and Graduate Studies in Education at Morehead State University in Morehead, Kentucky.